A well-known Virginia politician, George W. Henderlite, met with a terrible death yes-torday morning at the Metro, olitan Hetel. He arrived in the city the night previous and engaged room 167, stating that he wished to be called in the morning in time for the 7 o'clock train for the South. He was awakened about 6 o'clock yesterday morning, and came down to his breakfast. Nothing unusual in his ac-tions was noticeable, and he went back up seeley and H. C. Hallowell,

He remained up stairs until too late to catch the train, and a chambermaid passing his door heard him talking to himself. Shortly after 8 o'clock one of the guests of the hotel saw Henderlite standing up in his window and gave the alarm. Assistance came too late, however, as Henderlite jumped from the window and fell to the ground beneath with a dull, heavy thud, atriking head first on a pile of bottles in "Our Country," Channey M. "Divorce," and Saturday night, "Cymbeline." Ford's-Bowers-Thompson.

The friends of the legitimate drama will baye an opportunity next week to gratify their inclination by witnessing the performance of "Ledy Jane Grey," by the Bowers-Thompson combination. The piece presents many strong points, and the interest which unfortunate Lady Jane has awakened ever since she fell a victim to ruthless "Bloody Mary," receives a new impulse by the vivid scenes of the play. Of the talented actresses, who take the two leading parts, an exchange says: "Miss Charlotte Thompson as Lady Jane Grey is the embodiment of gentle beauty and noble impulses. She loves Guilford dearly who surround her, she lends to it even an at-tractiveness with which history scarcely en-dows it, and in the pathetic scenes, when she s humbled before her scornful adversary, she carried the house with her entirely. Mrs. Bowers' tendition of the part of Mary Tudor is true to the historic character, and is the same hold, unscrupulous woman, unyielding in her ambitions, and relentless in her purpose to effect the rain of her rival. In Mrs. Bowers hands, however, a new light illumines the securingly heartless woman, and the sympa-thies cannot fail to be onlisted somewhat with one who will not quail under the force of any circumstances.
